

2 PhD-positions in International Criminal Law f/m

For each 1,0 fte

Vacancy number 1.2010.00046

Two PhD researchers are sought for a project on the interaction between national and international criminal law, more particularly the divergence in the adjudication of international crimes. The project aims to conduct systematic and comparative research into international criminal law as applied by national courts and into liability theories developed by international courts with the ultimate purpose of drawing up (i) guidelines that can inform national judges to what extent they need to adopt an 'internationalist approach' and (ii) to develop a body of 'harmonized' substantive international criminal law.

The research will be part of the project 'Dealing with Divergence – national adjudication of international crimes.' This project is funded by a VIDI research award from the Netherlands Scientific Organisation, the NWO.

Tasks

The candidates will be required to engage in research leading to publications in academic journals and a PhD degree.

Requirements

The candidates should have a degree in law and/or criminology. Specialisation in international law and a masters degree would be welcome. The candidates' academic record should evidence ability and an interest in international criminal law.

Further particulars

The successful candidate will be a member of the Department of Criminal Law within the department of Criminal Law & Criminology of the Faculty Law. The initial appointment will be for a period of 12 months. After satisfactory evaluation of the initial appointment it will be extended for a total duration of 4 years. You can find information about our excellent fringe benefits of employment at www.workingatvu.nl
